Langley Court Community Planning Day

Over 100 people attended the Langley Court Community Planning Day on Saturday 21 May 2011 at the Pavilion, Langley Court. Participants included local residents, Langley Waterside and Langley Park Residents' Associations, local councillors and the MP for Beckenham Bob Stewart. The aim of the event was to bring together everyone with an interest in Langley Court and the surrounding neighbourhood to produce a practical Vision for its future.

Local participants favoured low density residential uses and ample green spaces with supporting leisure and community uses. Suggested leisure and community uses included a park with a sports pitch, a care home for the elderly, a village shop and a country club, comprising a spa, swimming pool, tennis courts and club house serving food and drinks. It is expected that these uses would create new jobs for local people whilst additional jobs would be created through the landscaping and upkeep of the estate.

Following the Community Planning Day the design team led by JTP analysed and summarised the outcomes and developed an illustrated Vision and indicative masterplan that was reported back to the community on Wednesday evening, 25 May 2011 at the Pavilion. Following the report back a summary newsletter (Newsletter 1) was handed out and this newsletter (Newsletter 2) is an updated version produced for distribution to the wider community. All quotes are from members of the local community unless otherwise stated.

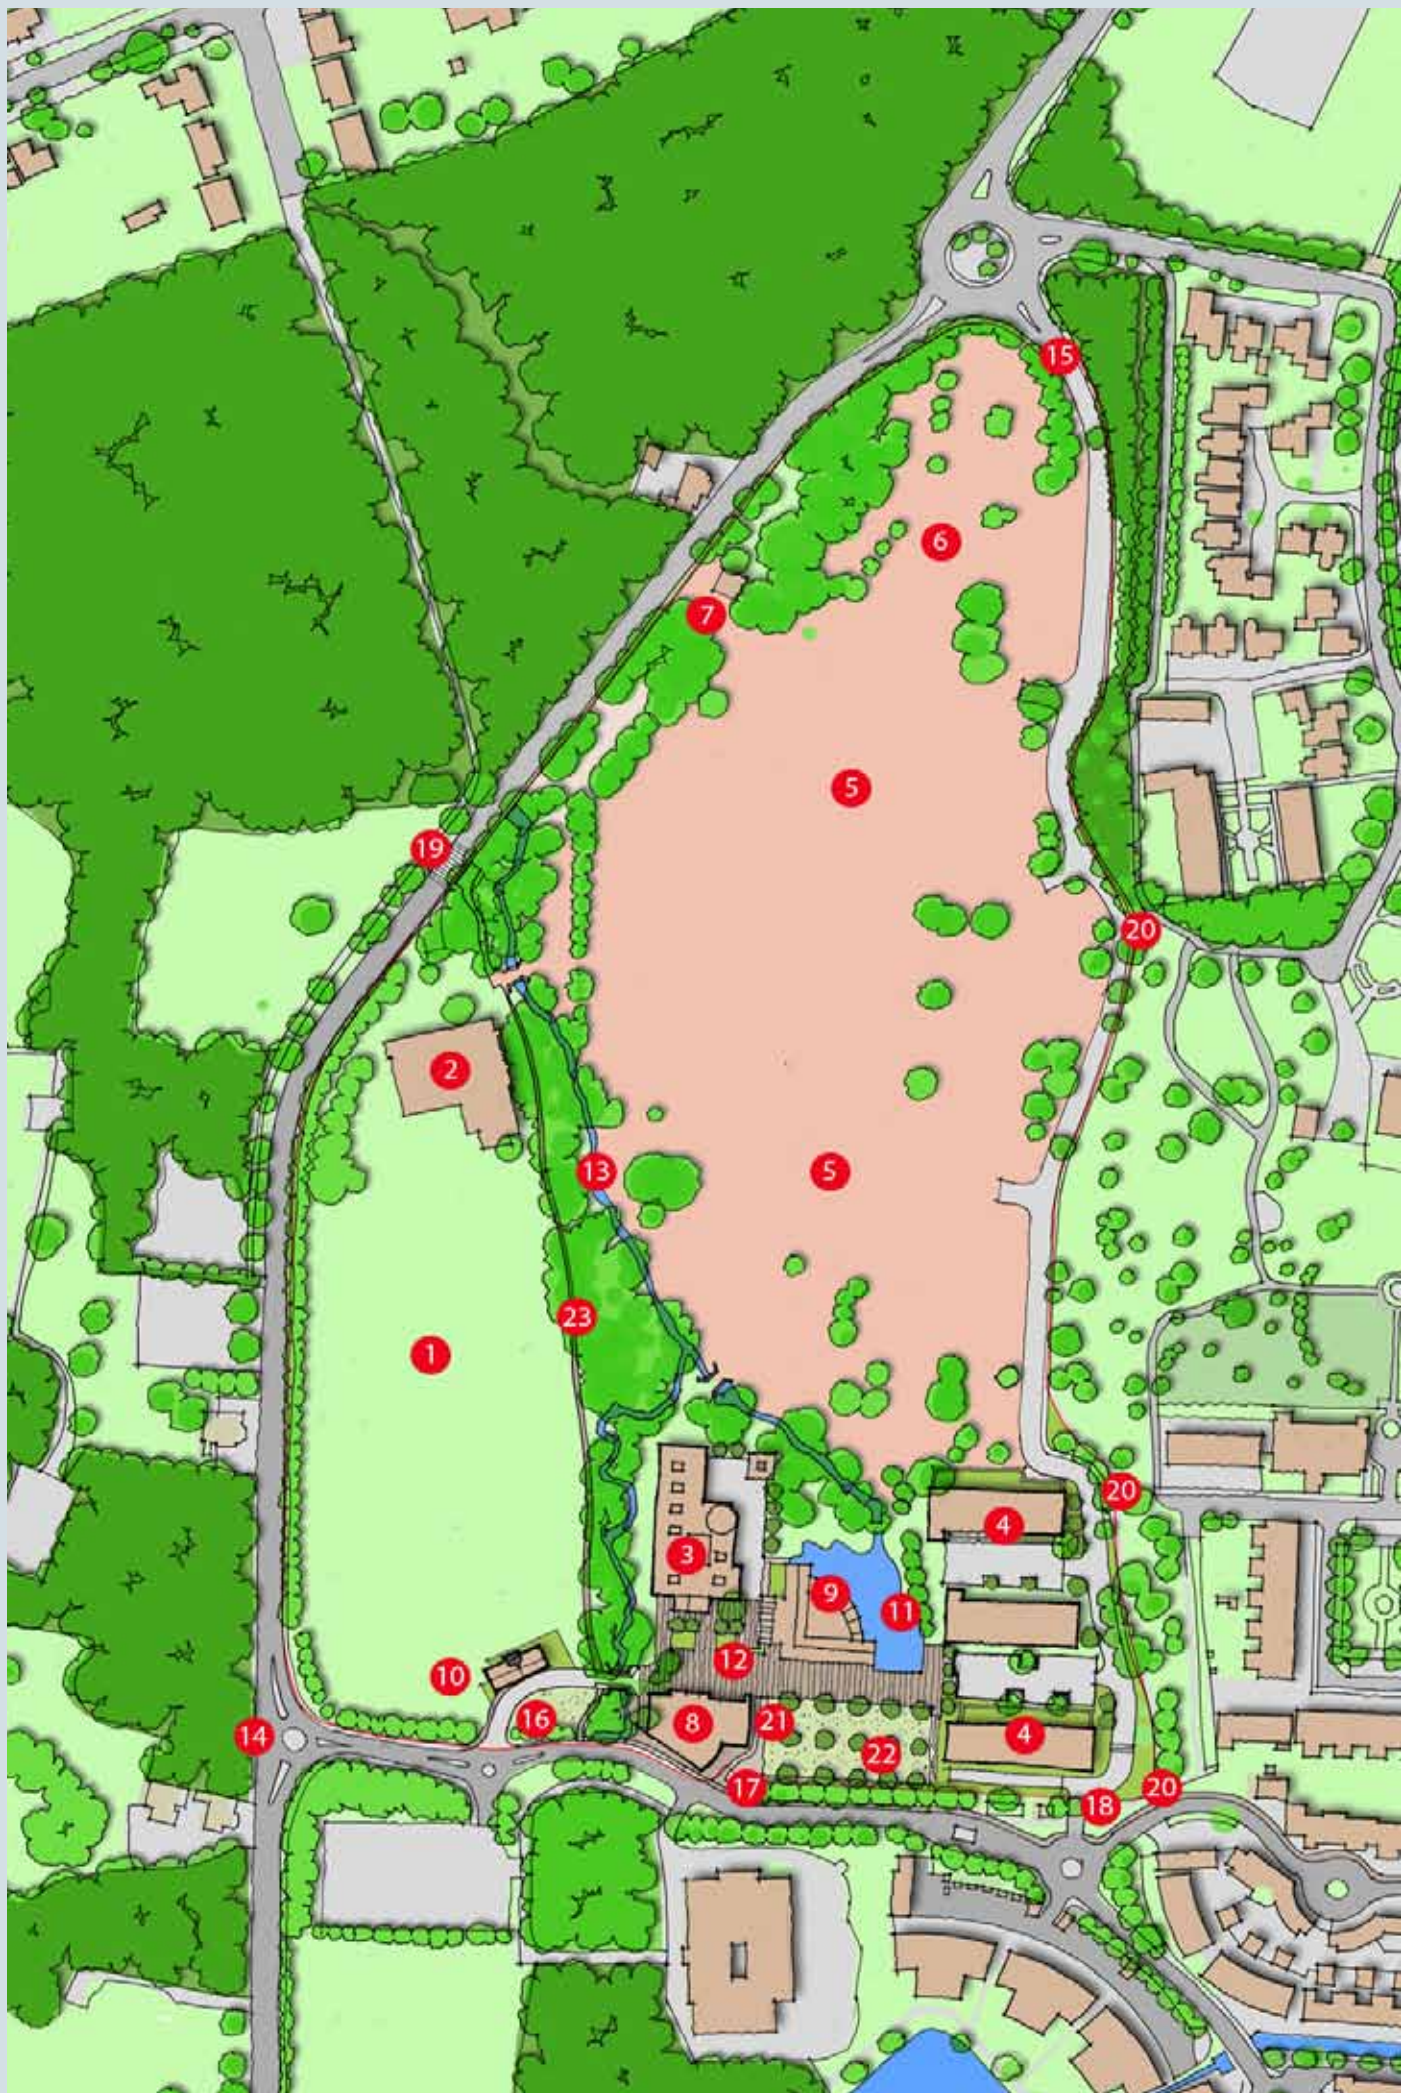

“We want the development to be green and spacious, but it must obviously be viable and provide a return on investment” (Local resident)

Langley Court Community Planning Day

Key Themes

Following the community planning day the team from JTP have analysed the outcomes and produced the following key themes as a summary of the views of participants.

Impact of new development

Existing local residents appreciate living in a secure, semi-rural suburban environment. Many have moved there specifically for the quiet, tranquil surroundings and pay a premium for an enhanced quality of life with good schools close by. There is already concern about the South Eden Park Road / Creswell Drive junction and the new development will be expected to contribute to local infrastructure improvements. More parking for use by Langley Waterside residents would be welcomed, as would improved paths and access for pedestrians and cyclists to the local schools and shops.

A green, residential environment

Aspirations for Langley Court include high quality executive housing, making use of best practice from elsewhere to create a forward-looking development that complements the adjacent estates. Development should be sympathetic to the semi-rural character of the neighbourhood, making the most of mature trees, hedges, water and other natural elements within the site. The green corridor along South Eden Park Road should be retained and landscape features enhanced. Proper maintenance and management of all open space will be essential.

“When you’re driving here from Beckenham you don’t feel you’re in a town at all – I’d hate to lose that feeling, but that will depend on what’s built here and how it’s built.”

Bringing community together

Many see the Langley Court development as an opportunity to bring the local community together, through the provision of facilities that will create a focus. The area of open space could be used either as parkland or as a sporting amenity and there was interest in reusing the pavilion building. There is an opportunity to create new community facilities to the south of the site, perhaps with a ‘country club’ feel, easily accessed by residents from each estate and serving as a meeting point or ‘heart’ for the communities. Subject to viability, an existing oast house could be converted for community uses, such as a café and farm shop.

“There could be community facilities here that are open to all three sites.”

Mixed use

There was discussion as to whether uses such as employment and retail should be included in the development. In general people felt that neither big box retail, nor industrial workshops would be in keeping with the character of the area but there was some support for office and research type employment. Some felt that health and leisure uses and a small, high quality, ‘village’ shop would be welcome.

“Industry and workshops here would be totally unacceptable.”

Viability and trust

There was awareness amongst participants that the development would have to be viable and provide a return on investment, but that there should also be benefits to the community. Sustainability is a key concern, with the need to ensure that any facilities that are provided can play an ongoing role within the community, and not close due to lack of funds. Broken promises from previous developments have left some local residents feeling cynical.

“There’s been a lot of false promises in the past. I bought a house here (Langley Waterside) because I thought there was meant to be access to the park in Langley Park and to the nature reserve. It turns out we can’t use either.”

Continuing community participation

The community planning day was appreciated by those who attended and the process should remain open and transparent so that local people are fully informed of proposals as they emerge. It is important that local residents have an opportunity to understand and comment on future proposals as they are developed. This could be achieved by regular updates via the website and email, meetings at key stages and a public exhibition prior to the submission of the planning application.

“Things can change as we go through the process, but we need a good route map.”

Way Forward

The Altessen team now plan to meet with London Borough of Bromley’s planning officers to discuss the community feedback and work with local stakeholders to form a steering group which we intend to work with during the remainder of the consultation.

We are in the process of setting up a dedicated website www.langley-court.co.uk and we plan to hold a public exhibition in September to display more detailed plans for the site, drawings and a model of the proposed development.

In the meantime, people are encouraged to continue participating in the consultation by contacting Charles Campion at John Thompson & Partners at cc@jtp.co.uk or on 020 7017 1780 or through the social networking sites Facebook at <http://www.facebook.com/pages/RegenerateLangleyCourt/217372028280934> and Twitter at <http://twitter.com/RegenLangleyCrt>.
